

ABORIGINAL ENTERPRISE KICKING NRM GOALS IN SOUTHERN TASMANIA

2017

Innovative Tasmanian Aboriginal business pakana services is an independent social enterprise that delivers NRM outcomes while supporting the Tasmanian Aboriginal community.

The vision for pakana services is to support the Tasmanian Aboriginal community by providing opportunities for training and skills development. It has grown from an idea shared between the Aboriginal community, NRM South and supportive partners to its current status as an independent enterprise (as of 2014).

pakana services offers land management services including tree planting, weed management, fencing, brushcutting and garden maintenance to organisations such as councils, government business enterprises and properties where land management has become a particular challenge.

The pakana ethos is focused on its people and the effective delivery of a quality service. Manager John Easton oversees the team of up to eight part-time Aboriginal workers and is helping to build their skills, capacity and confidence - providing a strong pathway for future employment in the land management sector.

Mr Easton is delighted with the progress the teams have made, and is working towards continuing to grow the business.

"We've seen some great things happen for our team members in the last few years. On a practical level our team members have developed great land management skills, and on a personal level there have been some great stories - from one fellow talking about his confidence at work, to others talking about the physical benefits of outdoor work" Mr Easton explained.

"Our focus is on delivering high quality land management services and returning the skills and the benefits back to the Aboriginal community. The vision for pakana services is that it will continue to grow so we can put more people on and bring further social and economic benefits to this part of the Tasmanian community."

NRM South CEO Donald Coventry says he is proud of pakana services' achievements and equally of the role that NRM South has played to incubate this important social enterprise.

"John Easton and the team have achieved a great deal in the last year and I congratulate them on their success. They have proven their skills and expertise in the land management area and have forged some great relationships with councils and other land managers in the state.

"It has been tremendous to see the benefits of this work to the team members and their families. The Tasmanian Aboriginal community has a great deal to offer natural resource management in Tasmania and NRM South encourages other land managers to get behind John and the pakana services team."

NRM South has played a lead role in the development, hosting and transition of pakana services. Support for Aboriginal business development aligns with NRM South's corporate, regional and national outcomes and also aligns with Australian Government priorities under the National Landcare Programme.

KEY OUTCOMES:

Boosting employment opportunities by building long-term capacity in the Aboriginal community through specialised training in land management techniques and skills development.

Industry Engagement as pakana services and NRM South both receive recognition through the high quality land management services delivered.

Improved Land Management identified via testimonials from customers such as the Tasmanian Dept. of State Growth.

On-ground results that are demonstrating great NRM outcomes including projects such as the North Bruny Biodiversity Fund Project.

Sharing Knowledge for better results. Businesses working with pakana services benefit from the sharing knowledge on techniques for improved outcomes.

Inspiring achievements that are providing a legacy for the pakana team, NRM South staff and those who work with pakana services.
